

To whom it may concern,

As a resident of Bywong I strongly object to the proposed incinerator in Tarago. I am not a political party donor.

I object to the risk that this project represents to the drinking water for my family and animals. Burning of rubbish pollution from the proposed incinerator is likely to include acid gases, and toxic heavy metal particulates. How can you guarantee that these will not have a negative health impact on my family and our animals?

In this day and age how can burning rubbish be considered as a viable option?

If the Eastern Creek waste incinerator in Sydney was rejected due to safety and health how is it safe in a regional and farming area?

If incinerators aren't safe for Sydney then they aren't safe for Tarago / Bywong/ Canberra.

Sincerely,

Elizabeth van Oyen
