I expect the NSW Government to meet the serious commitment made by the Premier, Mr Barry O'Farrell, prior to the 2011 State Election that, if elected, that his government would ensure that mining will not occur in any water catchment area, and would ensure that mining leases and mining exploration permits reflect that common sense; "no ifs, no buts, a guarantee". It is too late now to renege on that promise.

The disastrous outcomes from CSG mining in other parts of the world, especially in the USA, MUST count for something !

The citizens of New South Wales deserve, at the very least, a complete moratorium on CSG mining and the granting of exploration licences for CSG until comprehensive scientific research has been carried out, by independent bodies, on the full impact of CSG mining.

The Illawarra is a proven bushfire area and it is common knowledge that CSG mining causes the random release of methane gas. Is the NSW Government prepared to allow the addition of methane gas to the inferno of a bushfire, and so close to Sydney ? The answer has to be "no", no "ifs", no "buts".

Finally, any government has the responsibility to the citizens of the future to ensure that their water supplies remain untainted. The granting of CSG licences will compromise the quality of water in the catchment areas forever.
