I very strongly support the removal of the HCT.

I very strongly support the Interpretation Strategy, and the construction of the oculus at the surface of the new headland park. The plan to direct moving sunlight onto the sandstone features below is brilliant.

I have one additional suggestion. I suggest that prior to removal video cameras be installed at the top observation deck such that a video record of the views and activity of the harbour be recorded, as historical record of the view from the top. This video should be a 360° record, extended over at least 24 hours, and preferably much longer. It could include any special events on the harbour (too late for the fleet review, and possibly too late for new years eve). Lighting effects during Vivid Sydney such as the projections onto the Opera House, and festivities at Darling Harbour, could be included.

Most important is the historical video record which would include the industrial shipping movements, the commercial fishing boats, the oil tankers, the other large cargo ships, and the ferry movements.

Then, when the tower is gone, I suggest that these videos be displayed as appropriate in the public museum sites that are developed at Barangaroo and Millers Point. They would be presented as 'the views from the tower that used to be here'.

The videos could also be displayed in the Sydney Museum and the Maritime Museum. The content of these videos would appeal to locals (who have not had opportunity to access the top of the HCT) and to tourists, and would be distinctly different from the views and interpretations available at Sydney Tower. Parts of the videos could be accessible via the internet.
