

- At one point the water is still.
The surface becomes a mirror for the facade

- Suddenly

- One can see the surface underneath.
This surface can be made of a vegetable bracket (leaves, mushrooms etc...).

Or maybe (as you said) a sort of lacy with openings....

- Suddenly, after a while being still,

- while looking under the water, one can see a cut in the surface that seems being profound, like an abyss (This is an illusion. In reality doesn't need to be so ~~deep~~ deep.)

- Suddenly, after being still for a while,
the water starts moving and falling through this cut at the bottom.
One can see the water disappearing....

- For a while the pond has no water.
We could see the surface without water.

- The water comes into a container underneath

- Then the water comes out again,
filling the complete surface.

Here we can create a movement again
by bringing up the water.
The water can be pumped up by motors.
