I believe it is an excellent proposal & I know there is a demand already for this scale of residential development in Gosford.

The location is ideal & will start to expediate the necessary development for Gosford.

It will encourage further development i.e. university & large state offices.

I can note that the sweet price point will be at approximately $400,000 - $500,000 depending on unit size would highly increase demand for the units.

I fully support this development & believe it's a great & necessary development to put Gosford on the map.

Thank you! Looks attractive & trees - set back
Good to see progress in Gosford.

My concerns:

- ① Not enough car spaces / unit.
(People have 2 cars on the Central Coast to get to beaches etc)
- ② Roads → traffic ~~to~~ without improvement in roads / public transport.
- ③ Can it be any 'lower' eg. 16 stories only. What about the aesthetics - does it fit in with other developments 'aesthetically'?
- ④ Children's parks etc important.

Keep for updates.

Please keep
Gosford beautiful

- Good stuff.
- Has any thought been put into diverting Henry Parry behind this block (via Albany st)?
Get traffic out of the centre, pedestrian access to/from the park etc.
- State govt. needs to get serious about public transport in the area, especially frequent buses Gosford - Erina & beyond.
- These developments need more supporting ideas (from gov and council) to attract unis and professional employment.

Lederer's new master plan for Gosford

Architectural image of proposed Gosford Alive development by the Lederer Group

THE LEDERER GROUP have lodged a revised development proposal for their Gosford Alive project with the Department of Planning that will now see it considered by the Gosford Design Panel set up late last year to revitalise Gosford CBD.

The State Significant Development, on the Kibbleplex site is for a $280 million mixed use development comprising five towers above a podium with mixed uses including residential, retail, entertainment, leisure, indoor recreation, cinema and food and beverage.

Lederer say that with five towers across the site, the mix in height, shape and size allows for flexibility in use and individual staging of the project.

Given the site is quite large, the designers wanted to break up the site, providing an activated public laneway / link between William Street and Donnison Street which is an existing feature of the project and will include an upgrade of both streets.

The development will provide for ground level activation with commercial areas, public space and private areas and include commercial uses fronting Kibble Park, including civic space.

A feature of the development will be a strong emphasis on landscape design that brings the bushland background of Rumbalara reserve into the heart of the project.

The project will be known as Gosford Alive and ahead of the Development Application, Lederer Group in late June and early July will be displaying the master plan in the CBD in a consultation process.

A spokesman for the Lederer Group said,

"Following the State Government's planning policy changes back in October last year, we have again spent considerable time master planning the Kibbleplex site based around the Government's Architects brief and new policies. Using the Government Architect's designs as the basis of the design, we believe the current master plan is the best design we have seen for the site, it is empathetic to the Gosford locality/setting, while creating a vibrancy and scale that will assist in revitalising the CBD."

Lederer in 2016 had outlined their plans for a 15 – 20 year $850 million development and had lodged a Development Application with Gosford Council. This was subsequently withdrawn following the amalgamation.
